Current multi-modal imaging systems adopt either bulky cryogenic setups or complicated modal-separation technologies. Neither provides convenient vis/nir measurement with high angular resolution. Here, an omnidirectional, single-photon confocal, multi-modal (vis, nir, and r1) imaging system is demonstrated. Based on a free-space design, it is compact and lightweight. The system has minimal light loss, and the detection distance is about 13 cm. The vis and nir images with the angular resolution are both below 5 μrad. The system demonstrates its potential in measurement of vegetation properties, and nir imaging is even compatible with high vegetative cover and short spacing. This compact and versatile system has promising potential in many research areas.Q: Enable button based on checkbox value I have a collection of form elements being rendered by a form_tag.
